Section Three: Reading Passage II

Diversity: A Blessing or Curse?

1. A number of reasons may be given to explain why people differ in opinions, ideologies, attitudes or behaviors. It seems natural that people's attitudes at one point or the other will always be different. This may be due to varied reasons such as different backgrounds in which different people are brought up, different personalities or several other attributes. Is this diversity a good thing? Wouldn't have been wonderful than just sharing the same planet, it all people spoke the same language, had the same culture or belonged to one religion to one religion? Wouldn't there have been prejudices or wars between one ethnic group and another or one religion and another right? Well, obviously expect for wars, terrorism and other extreme negative forms of these differences, my guess is that the world generally would never have been as interesting if there wasn't this diversity.

2. There could be something positive in the diversity of human beings. Just think of it, if we all ate the same type of food, for instance, then we may have as well stayed on one part of the planet and in no time, there would be no place for everyone to stay and indeed no food for everyone. So in this case, some have to eat nsima, some sushi and others have to eat other types of food. This reduces unnecessary conflict. However, if people get killed or marginalized because they belong to a different category such as religion, political party or other divides, then it becomes a bad thing and the more reason why acknowledging this diversity becomes critical. I have personally at times found it very difficult to acknowledge diverse ways of life that I have been felt by a unfamiliar cultural environment or encounter practices that are totally different from your own or what you have always been used to. Some call this 'culture shock'. It is through continued learning and interaction with people from different backgrounds that these cross-cultural barriers are broken.

3. It may not always be necessary to break the so called cultural barriers but largely this may be one of the many answers to curbing unnecessary clashes between one category of people and the other and most importantly enhance harmony which is even more necessary no than ever. There are many challenges and issues now such as global warming and diseases that require people to have augmented efforts in combating these challenges and harnessing the limited resources, rather than focusing on the things that make one category of people different from the other. Differences and diversity in points of view, attitudes, behaviors, practices and cultures should be used to learn instead of creating disadvantages for others. With the latter, it seems everyone loses out in one way or the other. Both uniqueness and diversity of individuals are gifts that I am sure are meant to benefit humanity. With the advancement and wide use of technology, people now easily move from one place to another, criss-crossing and mingling with people from various cultural settings. It is my hope that in near future people will be accepted in societies regardless of their religion, sexual orientation, ethnicity or other various categories that they may or be perceived to belong.

4. One lesson I have learnt during my Global Health Corps (GHC) Fellowship is the importance of this gift of diversity. I feel it is a powerful tool and blessing to humanity in enhancing equity in sectors such as health, and indeed an important tool in enhancing social justice which is desperately needed in the world today. GHC, as an emerging community of young leaders who are themselves from diverse educational and professional enhancing health equity and social justice. To a larger extent, this diversity is indeed a blessing as a lot of the iniquities and injustices in the world have diverse root causes too. By positively using the world's diverse gifts, personalities and attributes, various challenges may be tackled. Tolerance, understanding and respecting some perceptions and practices of people deemed different from us may therefore be cardinal in combating some of the common problems that face all of humanity.

IV. Comprehension

Directions: Read the following passage carefully and answer items 83-102 according on the information there in. Each question has four choices, A-D. Choose the best alternative and blacken the letter of your choice on the separate answer sheet provide.

Section One: Reading Passage I

1. Manufacturing paper pollutes the air the water. Fortunately, new technology has made it possible for paper manufactures to reduce the amount of pollution they make. Many paper companies have reduced the amount of sulfur dioxide emitted during production by switching to cleaner-burning fuels. When a sulfur dioxide mixes with the nitrogen and moisture in the air, they combine to form acid-rain. When acid-rain falls to earth, it affects the growth of trees and plants and can kill forms of life in lakes. Paper manufactures have also worked to reduce the water pollution caused by releasing untreated production wastes, such as chemicals, into nearby streams and rivers.
2. Particles and chemicals are not the only environment concerns of the paper industry. The paper they produce is a growing environment problem. Americans use over 67 million tons of paper a year, and the majority of it ends up in the landfills. One way to keep so much paper from filling the landfills is to recycle it. A lot of paper we use is recyclable. Plain or office paper, corrugated cardboard, newspaper, and some food packing can all be recycled. Unfortunately, a lot of things that you might think are recyclable are not. Many kinds of paper packaging contain wax or wax-coated cellphone. This makes them non-recyclable. Most junk mail isn't recyclable. While newspapers are recyclable, their glossy, colored inserts are not.
3. Recycled can be used to make products such as newspapers, egg, cartons, paper bags, tissues, food and clothing boxes and corrugated boxes. In addition, recycled paper can also be used to make cardboard displays, building insulation and roofing material.
4. Even the "waste" left over after recycling paper be recycled. Manufacturing recycled paper produces by-product called "sludge." It is expected that sludge can be used as a soil conditioner. Spreading it on farm and forest land can add important nutrients to the soil. It can be similarly used to line and cover landfills. It can even be burned and used for energy.

5. In addition to all this, the process involved in manufacturing recycled paper is better for the environment. It uses less water, fewer trees and causes less pollution than manufacturing paper with virgin (new) pulp. Air pollution may be reduced as much as 74 percent, and water pollution as much as 35 percent.

Section Two: Reading Passage Two

1. Meat, poultry and fish were not originally part of man's diet. Our teeth evolved to deal with tubers and seeds, not flesh. Our digestive systems are those of foragers, not hunters. We cannot gorge ourselves on meat and then go without eating for days as many carnivores do.

2. Such evolutionary arguments may seem a thin basis for adopting a vegetarian diet today, however. The fact is that is a highly concentrated form of nutriment. It is also among the most appetizing foods in the average diet. Its flavors and smells are so thoroughly woven into traditional Western way of eating that many people find the prospect of doing without it disheartening. Yet the evidence that vegetarianism is as matter of individual choice is now spreading. For a variety of reasons, a habit that was once regarded as an eccentricity is gaining respect.

3. A vegetarian diet may be adopted for any one of three reasons the philosophy of the individual, range of foods that are available locally, or the religious beliefs of a particular community. Religions can impose varying degrees of vegetarianism. The Ethiopian Coptic Church, for example, prohibits meat on more than 200 days of the year. Trappist monks abhor the taking of life and are entirely vegetarian. Of the major world religions, both Hinduism and Buddhism have similar objections to exploiting other living creatures for food. Strict followers of these faiths are wholly or partly vegetarian.

4. A form of enforced vegetarianism is common in many parts of Africa and Asia, where meats costs so much to produce that poorer people are seldom to eat it. About eighteen per cent of the world's populations (excluding China) eat less than 10g (0.3oz) of animals protein per head per day- equivalent to two small eggs or one cup of milk.

5. But with the spread of affluence, the amount animal protein eaten in the average diet is increasing. Vegetarianism in the West is therefore less than a matter of economic necessity than of choice. The number of voluntary vegetarians in Europe and the US is estimated at several million. Some are motivated by aesthetic or moral idea; they deplore the killing of animals and some of methods of raising to use land for food. Some base their choice on economics; it is more efficient to use land for growing food directly than for feeding animals. Still others simply believe a vegetarian diet is healthier.

6. An extreme form of vegetarianism is veganism. The Charter of the Vegan Society says that "veganism is a way of living which excludes all forms of exploitation of, and cruelty to, the animal kingdom and includes a reverence and compassion for all life." In practice, the vegan excludes from his diet not only meat, poultry and fish but also animal milk and other derivates such as eggs and honey. Soya-based plant-milks are substituted for cow's milk and equally nutritious. Extending the vegan philosophy to clothing, vegans and plastics for rubber and PVC instead of leather jackets, belts or shoes.
